

Accurate, Ethical, and Equitable Grading: Myth-Busting, Principles, and Practicalities

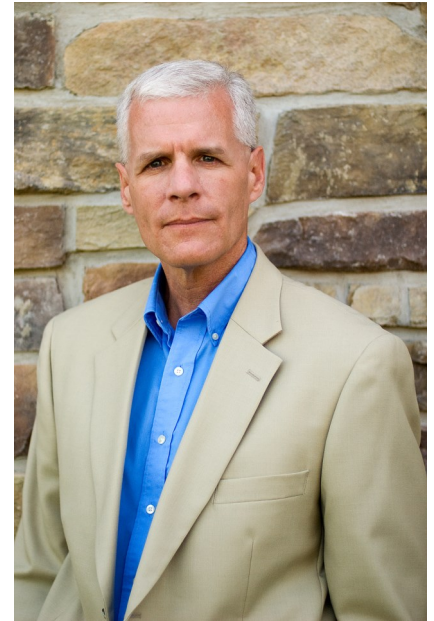

A Day-Long Workshop With Rick Wormeli

Rick's Observations:

Most educators want to do right by their students and their profession, but when it comes to grading practices, they sometimes succumb to complacency, faculty politics, or the very real exhaustion from today's teaching stresses. And gosh, it takes too much energy to confront one's own hypocrisy or change school culture for something so ingrained. Very real student futures are built or denied based on grading practices. So much is at stake, it's worth becoming informed, conducting candid conversations, and identifying action steps with colleagues. Yes, there's "why" here, but the major focus is making these elements doable. Don't miss this chance to light the path ahead!

Bring your:

, "Yeah, but what about...?," questions and challenges as well as your willingness to engage at a deeper level than normal.

$425

(If you register after December 15, 2023)

Workshop Outcomes:

Join us for a powerful PD experience in which we explore principles and practices of accurate, ethical, and equitable grading in the modern classroom. During our time together we'll focus on:

averaging or not—becoming evidentiary—re-learning/re-assessing—moving from student adversary to advocate—assessment practices that build student efficacy—formative vs summative assessments—the problems with conflation—zeroes on the 100-point scale—defining grades (particularly the A or 4.0 level)—descriptive feedback techniques—responding to equity issues when it comes to grading diverse students—what to do about extra credit—grading or not grading homework—graphic representations of student learning—alternative assessments—moving from grades as transaction to grades as communication—reporting late work and other work habits
